This slurry may contain an active ingredient such as a pesticide, herbicide, fungicide, or fertiliser. Aqueous dispersions can also be applied to seeds as a coating to improve the uptake of the active ingredient by the seed. These seed coating dispersions are particularly suitable for polymerisation and in the present context, the active ingredient is applied with the polymer to the seed. It is desirable to apply aqueous dispersions and especially coating dispersions to seeds or other crops in a continuous process to avoid costly batch processing. Preferably, the coating dispersion should be coated onto the product as a solid material and then either dried or contacted with a second
